I felt ready to teach based on standards when I graduated.

I truly felt ready to teach when I left WVSU.

I wouldn't change my teacher preparation experience for anything in this world. I feel that among my colleagues that attended other universities, I was the most prepared as a first year teacher.

Overall I learned the basics, I wish my professors had taught me more ways of integrating other subjects and technology into my content. My professors at the time (most no longer there) did the bare minimum and didn't push me to learn more.

The teacher preparation program was an overall positive experience. The program provided a general pedagogical framework and an adequate understanding of the "lingo and buzzwords" of education.

Great relationships. Prepared me to be a professional not just a teacher.

Please share your ideas for improving the preparation of WVSU completers:

and now I'm not at all comfortable with primary. I feel that the school should provide more oversight so that the hours are equally distributed.

Classroom management, I do not believe there is a way to teach classroom management until you are responsible for the classroom, however like most new teachers it was a struggle. The most helpful classroom management advice I recall is Dr. Waugh, "don't smile 'till Christmas." I didn't fully understand until my second year of teaching, it's much easier to "let up" than to be tougher.

Classroom management

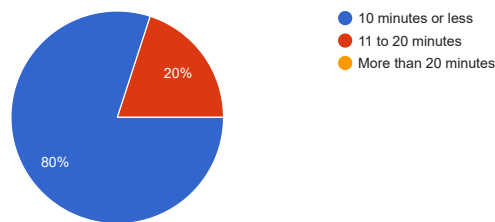

IEPs and understand accommodations (all teachers should know how to read them and understand them since they'll have students with special needs and accommodations in the classroom)

ALL faculty at WVSU should respect and advocate for WVSU students.

I would suggest possibly another technology course just due to the pandemic we are
